SOLDIER'S LETTER

TO THE

FEMALE VOLUNTEER:

BEING

An Earnest Request to Hang up the HAT,

AND

Pull off the BREECHES.

WITH

A. PERSUASIVE against FALSE APPEARANCES.

Deceit, beneath Appearance screen'd, May gain upon the shallow Mind; But the strict Soldier aims to view The naked Truth, in native Hue.

LONDON:

Printed; and fold at the Pamphlet-Shops of the Royal-Exchange, Temple Bar, and Charing-Cross.

(Price Six-pence.)

SOMBIEROS 11 (200) $ 1.5 CHARLEMAN COLUMN TO THE REAL PROPERTY The state of the s Notation Land of the Lat

THE

SOLDIER'S LETTER, &c.

MADAM,

S by appearing in a publick Character, you expose yourfelf to publick Censure, 'tis imagined, you can't be very much discomposed at the Remarks made by a SOLDIER; who, being above the Dictates of Ill-nature, says nothing, meerly from a secret Pleasure he may have in finding fault.

But, as by inlifting yourself, you are become one of us: You misse expect to be dealt with, with that free and generous Candour we make use of to one another; wherefore I take upon me to let you know, there are very different Conjectures concerning your Behaviour in the Army.

For, in Breeches and a fierce-cock'd Hat, you introduce yourself, saying, The Gazette lies, --- Our Men not stand; (no great Compliment to its Authority) but immediately professing yourself to be a Woman, 'tis clear, what you do be understood to mean, is true, Women's Men and not stand: Not they, indeed; and then 'tis time, We Women take the Thing in Hand. When was the Time you did not? I ask'd all our Regiment, which consists of three Batallions, that Question; and they vowed they knew not. But before you declare, you betray yourself to be a Woman, by placing those Fellows (tho' in open Rebellion) in that despicable Light you do, and calling them,

That scarce could fright the Buff-Coats of the City.

Now, allowing those Fellows to be as low as you can express them to be, could not you lose your farcastick Joke, rather than throw Aspersions upon the good Intensions of those honest Men, the Inhabitants of our Metropolis; especially, as by having put on the Cloath, you had professed your Attachment to the present Happy Establishment, in my humble Opinion, 'twas somewhat out of Character; and considering the critical Effect the Attachment of these Men may have, 'twas no less an ill-timed, than a poor, low Sneer; but neither these Gentlemen, nor the Rebel-Party, concerned my Intention, which is only to put you in mind of the Way, in which you use your Brother-Soldiers.

B

Some say, that tho' in Male Appearance tenacious of the Female Property (a Forwardness to take a Thing in Hand) you put on the Breeches, in order to keep that Hand warm, as knowing that to be the most effectual Way to raise the Spirits of, and put Courage into, Men, that you deemed at least as bashful, and thereby make them, strictly and literally speaking, a Standing Army.

Others, that you covered your Backfide out of Banter; infinuating, that a feeming Shyness had appeared on the Approach of a Bare-Britch'd Enemy: For, say they, she could not have thought, that what the Breeches contain, could have any Influence over an Army of Britons; otherwise, they would have stuck closer to Sir R-t M-o (where there were warm Quarters for Men of that Taste) on a late Occasion.

Others, again, more favourably conjecture, your Design was to allure the Messieurs with the Rebel Army to join ours, as they are said to give much into the Italian Goût, and like a smug-saced Youth exceedingly: This I agreed in, as I can't persuade myself, you would do any thing detrimental to the good Name of your Fellow-Subjects.

Some there are, who don't hesitate to say, That 'tis a Hint taken from the French Custom of masking those Batteries they situate, so as to be most gauling to the enemy; but I consess, I am so much averse to Introductions of the French Mould, that I would not encourage any of their Productions, and was that your Design, would recommend in its stead, a little Old English Resolution, whereby your fair Country-Women have always kept up the Prerogative of conquering every Thing that rises up against them; and by opening a sufficient Breach (which I verily believe you can do) induce them to enter; which, after they have done, you may possibly bring a severe After-Clap to bear upon them, which will so disorder them, they won't know how to extricate themselves, being quite Strangers to that Sort of Discipline; not but they sometimes meet with pretty rough Handling in their own Country, being Men much insested with an Itch after Women.

Away with French Deceits and false Appearances; come to us in your own natural Dress, and by applauding and gratifying some forward Youth (illustrious for his gallant Behaviour) at his Return, convince us of the Readiness the whole Sex shews to indulge those Men in particular, who go the greatest Lengths in their Service; then shall you raise an Emulation worthy the Intent: Besides, as going to quell an Insurrection the Female Garb is most proper, the Petticoat having always been looked upon to contain a Power of allaying rebellious Members.

Don't imagine we'll place the less Considence in you, on account of your Feminine Aspect: Not in the least; for we look upon Women, as the proper Receptacle wherein to repose our Secrets.

In this light (if I mistake not) we are ordered to regard Women; but that I should refer to you, whose Correspondence with the Clergy has no doubt been large, otherwise your Infinuations, to our Prejudice, among the Fair, would not have been so likewise, which may greatly hurt us in that Point, and diminish those Hopes we always entertained, of being in the fairest Way of being happy of any Set of Men whatever, and (as we flattered ourselves) not without just Pretensions.

For Beauty, the Reward of Bravery, has in all Ages been the chief Inducement to it among the Soldiery, and next to Liberty, (that invaluable Blessing) the Expectation of that Reward has been the principal Cause of our Men's having gone thro' their late Fatigues, not only with Unconcern, but Alacrity; and it would be the Heighth of Cruelty should they be berest of their only Means of Recompence. But, since I write to you in your Female Character, I must lay aside the Resentment due to a Male one, and only insist, to assimpt to you, on the Word of a Man of my Cloath, That to be happy in the Esteem of the Fair, and only that, is what makes it worth a Soldier's while to conquer and live: Can you then be too sensible, what Wrong you may do us, in making any Impression to our Disadvantage; especially as being looked upon by your whole Sex, a very competent Judge of Mankind.

But, as I would choose rather to convince, than barely affert, I'll endeavour by Demonstration to illustrate, that from Circumstances, and Way of Life, a Soldier can show his Abilities to make a good Husband, are not inferiour to those of the Clergy, that you so nod, and lick your Lips at; but I won't, after the Example of some of these Reverend Gentlemen, draw a Conclusion from my own Affertions, but leave to the Consideration of that Sex it most concerns, to weigh them, and (I'm hopeful) to agree with me in them.

Let us therefore suppose the Lives and necessary Behaviour of a real Divine, and a thoroughly good Soldier.

A well-disposed Gentleman, a Clergyman, having laid out Money in a genteel Education, is thereby brought acquainted with what we call Good Things, and of Consequence likes them; but his Function enjoyning Abstinence from the Good Things of this Life, his Honour (obliging him to keep up to his Profession) restrains him greatly, least People should imagine he made light of it.

A Soldier's Honour is by no means concerned here, he makes no Professions, but of his Affections to the Fair; and 'tis presumed.

fumed, they won't enjoin him Abstinence; and as for Luxury, he can't afford it; so that he lives on simple vigorous Food.

The Clergyman, who, in his Youth, has perhaps as much Vigour as any Man, but by his way of living, and checking his natural Appetites, turns all his Nourishment into that Channel, where there is most Call for it, is generally found to have the greatest Flow of Juices about his Jaws; for when he is not employed in that trisling Part of his Time, in eating, drinking, and sleeping, he is in some of the Offices of the Holy Function, where the Jaws are generally concerned; and the Throat, as being pretty much exposed to cold, by the frequent turning up of the Face towards Heaven in petitioning, is generally defended, as in some (whose Faces will admit of it) with a double Chin; in others, by a sufficient Pair of Dulaps, as a Fence Nature thinks it necessary to place there; and this (tho' now naturally accounted for) is, by some ill-natured Folks, construed to be the Effects of a luxurious Life.

The Soldier, as he must eat, drink, and sleep when he can enjoy them, must also march, halt, stand-fast, and make his Quarters good, wherever he goes; having therefore Occasion for all His Members, does not rob some to enrich others, finding Employment enough for them all. The good Minister is always with his Flock, keeps home strictly, keeps his Family in Order and under Subjection, and the Wife is so limited, that let her Inclinations be ever so pure and chaste, the Restraint she's under must, I should conceive, be very hard to brook. The good Soldier is always with his Regiment, (if not on Duty elsewhere) where there are no Objections to Women, if Conveniency (which if Inclinations suit can never be wanting) and Circumstances can bear it. His chief Business is in the Field, when the chaste Wife may employ herself as the sees necessary; we allow all Liberties not having the least Occasion to be uneasy; our Fraternity being Gentlemen, and of Honour, among whom, Modesty and Good Behaviour commands its due Deference. If, on the other hand, a Woman of Gallantry comes among us, she'll too meet with what she would be at; and the Husband, tho' he knows it, is never uneasy about her, or at Variance with his Friends, being conscious, she must have given room for such Treatment; and therefore, holding her in contempt, does not think her worthy his Anxiety. Now I should imagine this Liberty (so natural to English Women) the more eligible; and would you, Madam, argue against that Liberty, you feem so strenuous to support? If so, your Arguments against Popery, as they are not true, must seem infincere. Would you fly that Religion, and purfue ours, for a Benefit of Clergy? When the Clergy of that Church don't imagine themselves under those Limitations you apprehend they do; and ours are expresly commanded to be the Husband of but one Wife, each; and, in case of the Death th of that Wife, in strickness they should not even marry again; but they fometimes strain a Point.

Can you once think, that the Men that fly Denmark with such Disgust, can leave a fine Girl between fisteen and five and twenty, (when Blood's warm, Eyes sparkling, Looks engaging, Fancy in sull Strength, Breast heaving, Soul sull with Desire, and susceptible of Love) with nothing to assuage the natural bursting Flame, but a large Heap of salse Doctrine, or a Litany; and that in an unintelligible Language? Doubtless, he sometimes makes her sensible of the Naked Truth, and that exquisitely adapted to her Capacity; tho' they wrap up their Religion mysteriously, they love a plain, easy, comprehensive Way.

You except against a Nunnery, as a strange Confinement; and the Veil, as a cruel barbarous Custom. Pray, what is that Refervedness the Clergyman's Wise puts on because the Bishop's Lady does, as necessary to that Character? That is not a slight Strip of Tassety, or Muslin, that every Breath of Air is a sufficient Excuse for removing; no, 'tis a Restraint, and permanent. These Severities (as you think them) are none of the great Mischiess that attend

Popery, (from which L-d defend us.)

But those Wenches, who seem to have an impatient Desire to be Priest-ridden, rather than pay their Debts of Honour to the Soldier, cannot have true Hearts and sound Bottoms; so I wish them a speedy Transportation into some Popish Country, there to enjoy the Benefit of Clergy, till glutted with Satiety; and when Resection comes strong upon them, that they may be confined to a Nunnery in its most terrible Severity, as the Brothel wherein they were debauched, with a String of Beads to innumerate their Sins upon, and a Veil over them, to prevent other Objects taking place, and giving them the least Relief, are the sincere Wishes of,

MADAM,

Your Humble Servant,

WILL, WATTLE.

[[] religion in the contract of the contract of the And the second of the constitution of the cons in the country that the transfer of the country that a tie care games I have a said a safe care has said five. the signal but the built is to convict the time to the and and and to maning the head of the first of the first and the first of the first of the first of the first of the Contraction of the first of were your character region that or converte or ; the walk o husdomado witakas The secret social a Municipa, as a Carine Confinencia; and to be the second to the second country what is the Rest Labella Big Hall Cop's Lady to may the determine of the to ein 3 de grand a contra contra est un entre con en est est. clubed the billion at the the thought person safe , with the to grant -iraves that I should be the government of the configuration en Bui Calling Ling of the case on Countries to Commence of the state of the st The same of the commence of the same of th the state of the s Mar I to the land of the land of Carried Street COLUMN TO THE REAL PROPERTY.

